

Adira

NSW Multicultural Centre for Women's and Family Safety

Supporting sector capacity to provide culturally responsive safety services for migrant and refugee women,
children and families

About the Centre

Adira promotes culturally appropriate, evidence-based and community informed responses to domestic, family and sexual violence in NSW, including in regional and rural areas.

Our work is grounded in cultural responsiveness and informed by evidence and community insights.

The Centre collaborates across women's safety, multicultural and settlement sectors in NSW to enhance capacity for quality and safe culturally responsive domestic, family and sexual violence services.

What we do

- We support services to respond confidently to the complex needs of migrant and refugee women and children experiencing domestic, family and sexual violence.
- We provide advice on cultural, community and migration-related considerations in DFSV practice.
- We provide collaborative and direct casework support grounded in cultural responsiveness.

Collaborate with us

For referrals or to seek specialist advice on complex cases and explore potential practice collaborations, contact us at safetycentre@ssi.org.au or 02 8111 7077.

For more information head to our website:
ssi.org.au/safety-centre

How we can support

Collaborative practice support

We are flexible and provide tailored support to services across NSW based on your needs and expertise.

We can offer:

- Consultation on complex cases and cultural and community considerations
- Peer-to-peer caseworker consultations and intraprofessional advice
- Advice regarding effective advocacy for clients from migrant and refugee backgrounds
- Joint risk assessment and safety planning
- Case conferencing and co-case management
- Specialist referral pathway recommendations

Culturally responsive case management

Adira's practitioners provide direct casework for complex cases in south western Sydney.

We specialise in:

- Building trusted relationships with clients from migrant and refugee backgrounds, grounded in our in-depth understanding of cultural and community considerations
- Understanding and navigating the cultural and structural dynamics that impact help-seeking behaviours and access to support
- Comprehensive and culturally responsive risk assessments, safety planning and psychoeducation on domestic, family and sexual violence
- Intensive advocacy for client access to all available support, in the context of cultural and structural barriers.

Capacity building and collaboration to support culturally responsive practice

- Development of good practice models for quality and safe culturally responsive services
- Training and resource development on culturally responsive practice in the context of domestic, family and sexual violence
- Community engagement and awareness raising on the dynamics of domestic, family and sexual violence and available support services.